Let's Talk About It

Marriage Advice

By Yvette Tello

Once upon a time, marriage was meant to last forever. Now it is OK to be married several times or not at all. What marriage advice would you give to your younger self? Let's talk about it... #letstalkaboutit

Leon Gayton: "I was my ex-wife's third husband and she would tell me that her first husband was abusive and mean. The second husband was an alcoholic, pervert and crazy. At the time, I believed her. Now she tells her fourth husband that I'm all of the above, LOL. The only great thing that came out of that was my daughter."

Theresa Acuna: "Don't do it."

Jeff Hull: "DO not do it. . ."

Michael Chazz Momo Martinez: "Take a road trip with nothing planned. You'll see their true colors soon enough."

Letty Garcia Tijerina: "Don't do it till you're at least 30!"

Veronica Amaro: "Don't do it. You WILL meet your soulmate in your late 40's."

Amanda Cena: "To date longer and pay attention to how they speak to and about their family. Make sure he is a man who fears God."

Daniel Torralva: "I've never been married, but all my friends say don't do it."

Skipper Bishop: "Watch for signs of a cheating wife. After almost 30 years, she tried to blame me for it all. Run, run fast from those types."

Joann Laque: "I would say, don't ever get married. It's a piece of paper that states they have the right to 50% of what you have, earn and make. It's like you don't need to have a kid for someone to hold on to or love you. My partner loves me without a marriage certificate and I can't have kids for over 25 years ago. We have been together for 20 years."

Valerie Selpuveda: "One day you will find your soulmate and be happily married."

Lydia Curran: "RUN."

Richard Martinez: "Don't do it."

Angel Garicia Contero: "I don't know that I'd give my younger self advice on marriage. I think I have a great marriage. We met in high school and have been together for 16 years. I do have some advice for others though. Here it is: Marriage is not 50/50. Sometimes it's 60/40, maybe 80/20. Find a partner who is willing to share the load/bear the weight, but you also must be willing to pick the load back up to help your partner. They can't carry the unbalanced load forever. Pick your partner wisely. Nowadays, people pick off of physical attraction first. There are other attributes. Find those attributes that you can't live without in your partner as well as being attracted to them. If you can't find anything but physical/sexual attraction then it's just a fling. If you're busy watering your own grass aka putting the work into your relationship, you'll be too busy to look at your neighbors grass. Say I love you randomly throughout the day, everyday. Remind your partner of it often. Give sporadic hugs and kisses as well."

Gene Gomez: "Don't do it stupid."

Ernest Sánchez: "Marriage is a learning process, chances people take as part of happiness, so "Go For It" jump in that snake pit!!"

Edie Davila: "DONT DO IT!!!! NAH....I got lucky on my 1st draft selection. No trades quite yet."

About the Cover Artist: Jose Esquivel

By Dr. Roberto Haro

The Career of Jose Esquivel has spanned over 50 years in the graphic and fine arts in San Antonio, Texas. In the 1960's and 1970's the Chicano Socio-Political Movement was a major influence on his early work and provided a direction that continues to this day. Esquivel was a founding member of "El Grupo" in 1968, one of the earliest Chicano collectives in the country that evolved into "Con Safo" in 1971 in San Antonio, Texas. His work was included in the historical "Dale Gas" Chicano Art Exhibition held at the Houston Contemporary Arts Museum in 1977.

Comments on the Essay:

Dr. Ricardo Romo has written a brilliant piece about Jose Esquivel, a scion of Chicano art. Romo's historical narrative has included pertinent facts about the early impressions and growing talent of Esquivel. Esquivel's motivation to express his ideas and feelings through painting was conditioned by numerous human and environmental stimuli. [A true interpreter of the San Antonio Barrio experience] Aside from his enormous talent and productivity, Esquivel is a pioneer within the Chicano Art movement. He was a key figure in the development of Con Safo and continues to be a respected and immensely influential force in that movement.

Because of my friends and colegas at UCLA, I am also familiar with Cordova's book on Con Safo (UCLA: 2009). Dr. Romo has done justice to Maestro Esquivel, a celebrated and critically acclaimed artist/ advocate from our society.

Esquivel's legacy will be a bright and shining testimonial to the dissemination of what constitutes Chicano art in the US.

Ramón Hernández Reflects on Being the Only Local Chicano photographer to Cover the Watergate Trials

By Ramón Hernández

Watching the January 6 Committee Hearings is like experiencing a flashback to June 1973 when I began to cover the Watergate Hearings. I had been transferred to Washington, D.C. from Guam where I was a member of the Guam Press Association. Therefore, I was able to obtain U.S. Senate Press Photographer's Gallery credentials. I even took 8mm movies and color pictures for myself since I had to shoot black and white at ASA 400 (no flash) for the print media. Hence, I got to see all the Senators that served in this committee in action; and in the process made friends with Sen. Howard Baker. With the exception of the top picture which I purchased from photographer Fred J. Maroon to prove I was there, here's a few behind the scenes images that I snapped. If that does not look like me it's because I was 32 going on 33.

Jose Esquivel: Chicano Art Pioneer and Barrio Visual Interpreter

By Dr. Ricardo Romo

Jose Esquivel, one of the long-time Chicano artists in San Antonio and a co-founder of Con Safo, paints daily, an artistic activity he has committed himself to since the late 1960s. He is one of the founding members of the Chicano art movement in America. Before 1967 when Esquivel began his association with Con Safo, the American art world knew almost nothing about Latino or Mexican American art.

The Con Safo collective of ten San Antonio artists chose to identify themselves as Chicanos. Esquivel documented this art movement, including the preparation of the first Chicano art exhibits in Texas and the Midwest. Smithsonian curators with the Latino Museum recently connected with Jose Esquivel requesting all of his papers for their archives, as well as examples of his art. Esquivel's artistic journey is an important part of Chicano art history.

One hot summer day in 1947 in San Antonio's Westside, twelve-year-old Jose Esquivel knocked on the door of Porfirio Salinas, one of Texas' leading landscape artists who was already a bright star among emerging native Latino artists of Texas. The young boy had been sent by his dad to Salinas's home to cut the grass and help with other yard chores. Esquivel had never met an artist before, and he was immediately struck by the bluebonnet landscape canvases piled up in the Salinas's living room—a studio of a true master of Texas nature painting. Esquivel returned to the Salinas home many times to help with the yard work and other house chores. In the process, he also learned about art by talking to Salinas.

When Esquivel enrolled at San Antonio Technical and Vocational High School three years later, he made the decision to study art. The vocational schools of that era around the country taught only commercial art, but students were also encouraged to learn about fine art. [I know that school program well since I also attended Tech High School]. Esquivel excelled in commercial art, and following his graduation he received a scholarship to study at the Warner Hunter School of Art in San Antonio's La Villita district. Hunter personally assisted low-income students with scholarships. Esquivel studied with Hunter for five years learning line drawing, watercolor, and oil painting.

Few Latino artists in San Antonio could make a living in fine arts painting, thus Esquivel found work as a commercial artist in the hotel industry. In an era before computers and digital printing, all hotel notices and signs were designed by in-house commercial artists. Signs announcing the location of the dining rooms and conference sessions, for example, were prepared by artists trained in commercial art.

Although Esquivel excelled at this work, he disliked the pressure associated with daily, and in some cases, hourly deadlines, so he left the hotels to work in offices of the city's public utilities. That job provided better pay and financial security for his family. Esquivel was tasked with making charts and graphs for the company's board and public presentations. His talents were quickly recognized, and he helped create the first art department of the giant San Antonio utilities company.

A group of local Chicano artists, notably Jesse Almanzar, Jesse "Chista" Cantu, and Jose Esquivel, began meeting in 1967 at the Almazan Gallery in La Villita, and the art collective began taking shape. They formally organized when Felipe Reyes joined them the following year. Initially calling themselves Pintores de la Nueva Raza, the members invited San Antonio College art professor Mel Casas to join. Casas proposed that they call their art collective Con Safo. Chicanos in most barrios of the Southwest used the con safo symbol, aka C/S, as a type of king's x—an understanding or declaration surrounding protection or a shield from personal harm.

In their meetings, the members frequently debated identity issues of being Mexican, Mexican American, or Chicano. They also debated what kind of art represented La Causa, and how best to make their purpose and ideas known. In 1971 Mel Casas, the leader of the group, assigned himself the task of writing a "Brown Paper Report" about the discussions and arguments that the group presented about the meaning and direction of Chicano art.

Esquivel has carefully preserved his notes from the Con Safo meetings as well as documents related to their efforts to exhibit their artwork. At his home, Esquivel showed us dozens of notebooks that documented a full and broad range of debates and discussions about Chicano art. He carefully preserved the flyers, brochures, and photos of their early exhibits, a remarkable documentation of the period 1968-1974. Esquivel's involvement with Con Safo has now been well documented by Ruben C. Cordova, the author of Con Safo: The Chicano Art Group and the Politics of South Texas. [UCLA: 2009]. This period in Chicano history and the significant role of Con Safo in bringing attention to Chicano art and Chicano artists is not well known to art historians.

Tomas Rivera, a pioneering writer of Chicano literature, assisted the Con Safo art group with an exhibition that he arranged to travel to several cities of the Midwest in 1972. That year, several Con Safo members were also invited to participate in an art exhibit at Trinity University honoring Cesar Chavez. Art historian Jacinto Quirarte met with several Con Safo artists in San Antonio in 1971-72 for his research on Mexican American art. Quirarte, an art professor at UT Austin in the late 1960s and early 1970s, interviewed Casas and several members of Con Safo for his pioneering book, Mexican American Artists [1973].

After Esquivel left the Con Safo group in 1974, he also drifted away from what he called political art. For a time he painted Texana art. His priorities shifted, and he devoted his artistic energies to art that would give him financial stability and enable him to send his children to college. His art sold well, and he was proud to support his son's education at the Pratt Institute.

The dozens of old photographs in Esquivel's home studio reveal much of his artistic journey. Over the years he met many Chicano artists from across the country. The art in his home, principally of the past 25 years, aptly shows his creativity and exceptional ability to interpret the Chicano experience in America.
